This story was originally published in Day One, a weekly literary journal dedicated to short fiction and poetry from emerging writers.

Katrina was eight months pregnant when a slew of crime hit her neighborhood. After that, her dreams turned violent, and in them she was the one holding the gun. “It’s your inner mama bear,” her friend Maya told her, “coming out of hibernation.”

A few months after her son is born, Katrina hears of an attempted assault on a creek trail near her home. With her fears piqued—and with the exhaustion, elation, and protectiveness of new parenthood coloring her perception—she struggles to decipher real threats from imagined. A morning walk with her newborn son puts her anxiety to the test, but it’s within the apparent safety of home where Katrina will face a more personal kind of danger, and where she’ll realize that some catastrophes cannot be guarded against.
