Lorenzo follows up his first volume of poetry "rounds" with this second volume. The history of creating "rounds" is interdisciplinary. When it occurred to Lorenzo to express himself in a circular form with my "rounds" rather than a linear form, he hand lettered each poem on a penciled guideline using a round template and sheets of tracing tissue. then he would "ink in" each letter. All tedious and time consuming. To create a "round" using type was a bit more efficient. He would type the piece in a "linear" form. Then he'd cut the line into a strip. Next, with a sharp blade he would cut "darts" between words, so the strip of paper would be flexible enough to bend into a circle. On a pencil lined circle, he would position the poem. Finally, he would apply rubber cement to the strip of paper and maneuver it till the beginning and end of the strip matched to his liking. To finish, he'd press the strip down till the glue dried.
